

Future Study

Because the data tends not to support the hypothesis, this researcher wonders what factor was not appropriately accounted for in the experiment. In the research there is indication that oxygen might be a factor in the ripening process which would tend to coincide with the data of this project. Also, there were several assumptions made since monitoring the ethylene gas levels around the banana was impossible with the equipment available.